MARCH REPORT

COMMENTARY

- Global equity markets delivered positive returns in March upon hopes that interest rates will begin falling this year.
- The share market recovery broadened upon positive economic data, but large global technology stocks were again the strongest performers.
- The Portfolio returned 1.6% in March, while the benchmark returned 3.2%.

Global share markets delivered positive returns again in March. Economic data remained reasonably positive and moderating inflation supported expectations of interest rate cuts later this year.

US Core PCE inflation fell to 2.8% in February as pricing pressures continued to gradually ease across major developed economies. In signs of a broadening recovery, US consumer confidence, retail sales and industrial production all improved in February. Meanwhile, European share markets made gains, as the fall in retail sales moderated to 0.7% year-on-year. China's manufacturing sector continued to expand, although weak consumer spending and the highly leveraged real estate sector continued to slow economic activity, leaving local share markets little changed in March.

The Fund continues to overweight information technology, consumer discretionary and communications services, while underweighting financials, energy and materials.

The Fund benefitted from positive stock performance in information technology and the overweight position in communications services. However, stock performance – especially in financials and healthcare – generally detracted from returns. Growth stocks underperformed value in March as the share market recovery broadened, after outperforming strongly during the first two months of the year. The Fund's growth orientation therefore led to it underperforming the benchmark. The Fund's zero weight in energy and materials, the underweight in financials and overweight in information technology further detracted from returns.

The strongest contributor to relative returns in March was again the overweight position in US-based semiconductor developer Nvidia. The company announced its new Blackwell B200 GPU, the world's fastest chip which will cost nearly double the current H100. Moreover, the Fund's analysis of industry forward data points indicates that demand for servers continues to accelerate.

US-based global technology group Alphabet also outperformed strongly. It announced that it is in talks with Apple to integrate Google's Gemini AI model into future iPhones. This would reduce the risk of losing search engine market share to AI-powered competitors such as OpenAI. Google currently pays Apple US$20 billion per year to be the default search engine on iOS devices.

US-based content creation and publishing software company Adobe underperformed after announcing first quarter earnings, which although strong, disappointed some investors. OpenAI also previewed a new text-to-video tool Sora, which is seen by some as a competitive threat. However, Axiom believe that Adobe's potential to accelerate earnings growth in the second half of 2024 is not reflected in the current market valuation.

The Fund's overweight position in US-based producer of animal medicines and vaccinations Zoetis also detracted from relative returns in March. Vet surgery foot traffic decelerated and safety concerns have been raised regarding its pain relief drug Librela. However, these appear manageable and it should do well in the US, having been successful in Europe.

The Fund continued to increase its position in US-based streaming and production group Netflix, which was first established in January. It expects the company to increase subscribers faster than consensus market forecasts in the March quarter and the new advertising-supported membership product will help drive long-term subscription growth.

The Fund also added to its holding in Taiwan-based semiconductor manufacturer TSMC after the company reported monthly revenue growth ahead of expectations. This should enable earnings to grow faster than forecast in the March quarter.

The Fund reduced its holding in Hong Kong-based China life insurer AIA Group. Investor caution towards Chinese stocks, as economic activity levels remain subdued, continues to drag on the stock's performance, despite its strong fundamentals.

The position in Japanese entertainment and electronics group Sony was also reduced following the disappointing forward earnings guidance which accompanied recent quarterly earnings. However, PlayStation 5 console revenue expectations now appear more achievable.

No new positions were established in March but the sale of the holding in US-based global automotive and clean energy company Tesla was completed. The company continues to be forced to cut prices globally as industry data indicates slowing demand for electric vehicles.
